user1: The Republicans are much more hypocritical.

user2: Hmmm...this is a good one. Of course, being a Democrat, I'm biased. However it seems to me I have experienced times when I could point out examples of Republicans being hypocritical.

user2: Yes, I agree. I'm just trying to think of specific examples.

user2: Can you think of any?

user1: They continue to work under their own agenda rather than pass the peace olive branch to the Democrats user2: One that sort of comes to mind is that most Republicans seem to support building a wall, and yet, they want the labor that many immigrants provide at base minimum wage that many Americans won't do.

user1: Their stance on gun control is the current topic user1: It is like driving with someone who is wearing blinders and they are the drivers.

user2: Ah, okay. I missed that we had a specific area...ok, thinking...

user1: I'm waiting for your reply.

user2: Yeah. Agree. But I'd say a specific area of hypocrisy might be that they say, usually that everyone should be able to have a gun, at the same time as those people shouldn't be checked out.

user2: As in, they support gun rights, but don't support assuring that the people who have guns aren't mentally damaged.

user1: They say, they say but their jobs are to pass legislation.

user2: Can you think of any other things like that? I'm trying to think of other examples.

user2: Oh, here's one. Most Republicans want to outlaw abortion, but they don't seem to be aware that many of the babies that would be saved would then be subject to school shootings.

user1: The Republican's talk and made their voices and opinions heard and it doesn't matter that they are wrong.

user2: Yeah, it's true. But I think we need to have specific examples of areas where they contradict themselves.

user2: We only have a minute left I think, but I think this last argument about supporting lives at the same time as not protecting lives is an interesting one.

user1: Why does anyone need an assault rife that is not in the military. They are guns and then there are very dangerous guns.