user1: As a Democrat I would normally tend to think that Republicans are more hypocritical, but if I am being honest, I think both parties can tend to show hypocrisy.

user2: This is a hard choice - I think it depends on the topic. Both Democrats and Republicans can be hypocritical if they are not 100% committed to a way of thinking about a topic.

user2: Seems we agree, at least to some extent.

user2: I'm sure we each have a definition - what wouldbe your definition of hypocritical?

user1: I think that we do. Both parties have been hypocritical before. Both parties have their good and bad merits.

user1: I think being hypocritical is saying one thing and doing the opposite of what you said. What do you think?

user2: I agree, with one possible addition: doing the opposite if it suits your intention of appearing to be favorabe in the light of your own party.

user2: Just my opinion...

user1: I think an example of hypocrisy is Ted Cruz flying to Mexico during the cold front in Texas a few years ago. He knew his constituents were suffering but went anyways.

user2: Yes, that is a great example. Wile I support Biden in his recent talk from the White House about the Uvaldi shooting, he needs to include himself when he says "when are we going to grow a backbone."

user1: I agree. I know its hard to get legislation passed with Congress being so deadlocked in their ways. He is the president, there has to be something he can do, maybe an Executive Order?