user1: I think Republicans are more hypocritical.

user2: Hi there, hope you are doing well, I used to think that republicans where way more hypocrital but over the year I would say I still think they are but we are getting there at least in some members of our party user1: I can't think of a single Republican policy that aims to improve society.

user2: I would certainly agree on this point user2: Especially after all these shootings and the continuation of them it seems they still think about keeping their sacred guns user1: So when I see a Republican go off on Democrats about anything -- there doesn't seem to be any substance to the arguments beyond getting people riled up.

user2: It's so far from logic that it is hard to take them serioulsy user1: I think you are right.

user1: There doesn't seem to be any messaging about fixing the gun problem.

user2: I know right, it seems like they know there logic does not make sense so they start agruements to cloud that fact user1: The whole thing is rather depression because no progress is being made.

user1: depressing*

user2: To be honest I dont think there will be anytime soon, seems like so much has happened and the responses do not seem to change and I think the hypocrisy of the republicans keep that train in motion user1: I have heard them blame mental health on shootings, but will sign a bill to reduce mental health funding not long before.

user1: That fits the definition of hypocrisy in my opinion.

user2: Exactly, they only care about themselves in every situation that arises user1: The only thing we have to fall back on is voting, and that doesn't seem to be helping things fast enough as people are actively dying.

user1: Actually, about the same goes for COVID policy too.

user1: It was nice talking to you.

user1: Looks like our time is about up.

user2: I agree, and if I recall correctly it seemed as though the rebulicans were against the vaccines in the start and seems they pretend like they care now just not to be hated lol user2: Same to you, good talking with a fellow democrat, have a good one!